

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTIONS

5.1 Conclusion

After going through the process of collecting and analyzing each data from “Business Proposal” series, the researcher discovered 144 dialogues that were carefully chosen to locate the language styles and analyze them using Martin Joos’ (1967) theory from his book “The Five Clocks”. The researcher concludes the key distinctions between the language styles based on this research. The researcher discovered 0 data of frozen style, 3 data of formal style, 80 data of consultative style, 55 data of informal style, and 6 data of intimate style. Each of the data demonstrates the characteristics of each language type.

After analyzing the language styles, the researcher discovered social factors that influence the usage of language styles by the main characters in “Business Proposal” series. The researcher applies Holmes’ (2013) theory about social factors: Participants, settings, topics, and functions. The study discovered all four social factors influence the main characters’ method of communicating through language styles. The first is participant, and the participation characteristics that have a large influence include people's age and their status in the community or society. The second factor is setting, which has a large impact on how people communicate since people must conduct in a specific setting, place, time, and context. Third, depending on the issue, numerous themes in the series reveal a variation in the way people communicate, whether it is a serious matter or merely storytelling and gossiping. Finally, the function of conversations, the function of influencing others to change the way they talk in order to make all of that function to work, such as informing something to the public and asking something trivial to closest people.

5.2 Suggestions

After finishing this research, the researcher then would like to suggest for readers, English literature students, and for the researcher herself. The researcher suggests that this research is a good reference for students who want to do research about language styles. The researcher also has a suggestion that future researchers can improve the research about language styles into more complex research and with different objects or data since language styles can be applied in many different forms of data, for examples, books, novels, movies, articles, real-life conversations, etc.

The data source for this research, "Business Proposal," is also fa good series that can be researched in varieties of other linguistics theories such as Pragmatics, Semantics, and Translation theory, or even literature theory. Finally, the researcher invites the readers to be more interested in conducting research about language styles and the way people speak that has been influenced by social factors and comprehensively understand the theory of language styles, especially for those who are interested in the theory of language styles from Martin Joos (1967). This research still has the potential to be improved and upgraded. Therefore, advice, comments, and ideas for making better research are welcomed.
