

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSIONS & SUGGESTIONS

This chapter is talking about the writer's conclusion of the study on the analysis of Jeffrey Dahmer character on Dahmer Movie Series through Psychoanalytic Theory by Sigmund Freud and the writer's suggestion based on research feelings.

5.1 Conclusions

After having analysis the writer puts 2 conclusions in this thesis which related to the main character, Jeffrey in the Dahmer Movie. Based on the analysis of the data above that the author has collected and analyzed, that this film tells about a person's personality disorder. There are 3 mental levels and 3 personality structures in it. Conscious-Praconscious-Unconscious. However, from the data that has been collected and classified, it appears that the dominant data is from the Subconscious. Jeffrey Dahmer's character has a psychiatric disorder where it is formed from several factors according to the writer who has explained earlier.

A psychoanalytic disorder that Jeff has belongs to the Id Ego category of Structure Personality in Sigmund Freud's theory which is the sex instinct (life), eros, which contains the libido, and the aggressive instinct (death), are all parts of this group that are present from birth. The impulsive or unconscious aspect of the soul that reacts right away to primal urges, cravings, and desires is known as the id.

5.2 Suggestions

Literary works have a lot of knowledge and various discussions. Literature reflects life is a clue to know what is happening with us. It can be applied as a reflection and idea of the city in the world we live in. The author wrote this thesis to become a public discussion, especially in the field of literature. The author knows for sure that there are still many mistakes in this thesis due to limited knowledge and materials in completing this thesis, but the writer hopes that by reading and understanding this thesis the reader can get something useful. This also makes the reader aware of the mental health that many people currently suffer from. The author hopes that readers can be more aware of mental health conditions so that they are able to anticipate early on before mental illness conditions get worse.

The author also suggests that parents can be more focused and concerned about giving love to their children. The author really hopes that parents can learn more about how to raise children, because the upbringing of boys and girls will not be the same. Make sure you are sensitive to your child's condition when they may start acting strangely. Watch your child's development, how they socialize, who they are friends with, and give enough affection so they don't feel lonely. Adequate education and attention from the family can minimize any bad possibilities to occur in children.

SUMMARY SYNOPSIS

Jeffrey Lionel Dahmer is shown as a man with a not so pleasant childhood, a conflict between his parents which ended in divorce. Little Jeff is shown as a quiet child and is considered strange for children his age. His oddity is coupled with his interest in animal necropsy. Jeff likes the method and process of performing dissections on animals that have died such as raccoons, fetal pigs and mice.

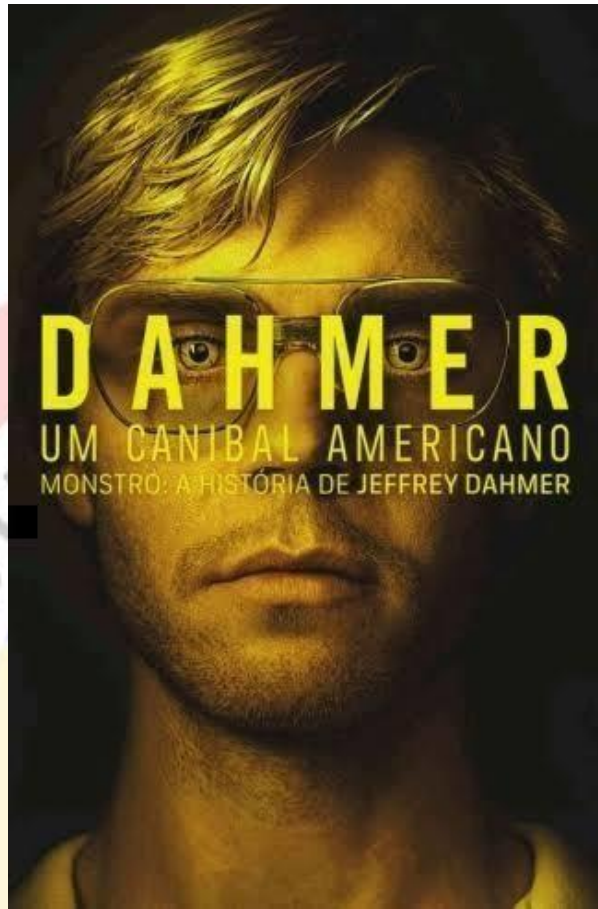

Jeff's father who wants to be a good father to his son also has the ability to do necropsy to teach Jeff how to do it properly. Jeff's father saw his son's interest as something that could make him a scientist in the future. His childhood was getting more complicated, coupled with problems with his mother, who was an addict of sedatives, causing a fight with his father. His mother became angry and indifferent to Jeff, on the other hand his father was no longer able to respond to everything his wife did. In the end everything had an impact on little Jeff, making him a child who was difficult to socialize and was often alone.

In his small family, Jeff never received full attention from his parents, especially his mother. By the time he was a teenager, Jeff was increasingly showing his abnormality. He becomes a figure who is clumsy with sexual orientation towards men. What Jeff experienced shows that a person's social environment greatly influences the formation of his character and behavior, especially the family environment. In addition, unconscious past wounds can also produce deviant behavior patterns. When a child sees his parents fighting, the child will feel uncomfortable, afraid and even feel uncomfortable around his parents. They will be anxious because they see the anger of their parents and cause negative thoughts.

On the other hand, a father or mother who often fights has the potential to find it difficult to show my warm attitude and love to their children. When all the desired affection is not achieved it will affect the child's mentality, like Jeff did, when someone he likes likes him too, Jeff feels that he has someone who pays attention to him and he feels he is not alone. So, when the person he likes wants to leave him, even if only to return to his house, Jeff feels threatened that he will be abandoned and returns alone. Various ways are used to persuade them to stay until it causes murder whether intentional or not, so they can stay together.
